What does it commemorate?
Independence day marks the end of the British administered Emirate of Transjordan and the declaration of the Kingdom of Jordan on May 25, 1946.

How does the country celebrate?
The day starts with a state celebration where the royal family, military and civilian officials give speeches. There are also firework shows, military and other parades, and traditional concerts held throughout the day.

Jordan will mark 75 years of independence in 2021. However, as was the case in 2020, social distancing measures and curfews due to the COVID-19 pandemic will limit the scope of celebrations. Parades and other gatherings will be televised to encourage remote attendance.

How is the holiday publicly visible?
Jordanians decorate their homes, cars, and public buildings with the national flag. Many offices and other work places close in observance of the holiday.

What does it commemorate?
Independence day marks the end of the British administered Emirate of Transjordan and the declaration of the Kingdom of Jordan on May 25, 1946.

How does the country celebrate?
The day starts with a state celebration where the royal family, military and civilian officials give speeches. There are also firework shows, military and other parades, and traditional concerts held throughout the day.

Jordan will mark 75 years of independence in 2021. However, as was the case in 2020, social distancing measures and curfews due to the COVID-19 pandemic will limit the scope of celebrations. Parades and other gatherings will be televised to encourage remote attendance.

What does it commemorate?
Independence day marks the end of the British administered Emirate of Transjordan and the declaration of the Kingdom of Jordan on May 25, 1946.

How does the country celebrate?
The day starts with a state celebration where the royal family, military and civilian officials give speeches. There are also firework shows, military and other parades, and traditional concerts held throughout the day.

Jordan will mark 75 years of independence in 2021. However, as was the case in 2020, social distancing measures and curfews due to the COVID-19 pandemic will limit the scope of celebrations. Parades and other gatherings will be televised to encourage remote attendance.